Such as could be found, I have picked up, and here throw them forth upon the stream of lime, thus sending them down to you. - To you, to whom my heart goes forth, in its longings for the day, which you will see, which I also almost see, in the distance - the day when this great nation shall fulfill its happy destiny. I see, as in the distance, an era of peace and plenty, and of the development of untold wealth; I see an era of liberty and righteous law; and my faith beholds, in that good time coming, our own dear and beautiful human nature regenerated, perfected, and adorned. We (Our nation) are passing through a red sea; a baptism of fire and blood. O it was a sad thought that it must needs be. But dear and loving friend - brighter skies are yours, than ever we have known. Your sun will be as...
