Not illustrated. 1893 Excerpt: .having a radius of one millimetre would have a pressure exerted on its surface due to the stress from its $2\pi \times 18,000 = 5,730$ dynes per own flux of $3.1410 \times (0.1)^2 \times 3.1410$ cubic centimetre of its volume, and a small element in or near the surface of any shape occupying $\frac{1}{4}$ th of a cubic centimetre would be forced towards the axis by a pull of 5.73 dynes. Three-fourths of this stress is due in a round wire to side pressure and one-fourth to the tension along flux paths encircling the surface. Fig. 18 represents two systems of potential. One, indicated by the parallel straight lines, belongs to a uniform intensity. The other, shown in radial dotted lines, is due to a long, straight, current-carrying wire appearing in section at c. If the parallel lines are one centimetre apart $\phi = 5$ in the first system over the 64 square centimetres of space included in the diagram. Also since $4\pi c = 18$, the current establishing the second system has a strength of 1.432 or 14.32 amperes. For numerical convenience, the cyclic elevation of potential round the wire is indicated as taking place at the line A o B in the surface of zero potential for the first system. The arrows indicate the respective directions of the flux in the two systems and are assumed to lie in the plane of the paper. The current c must therefore be flowing down the wire from the...
