DOWN THE DELAWARE RIVER IN A CANOE. You can run everything on the river but the Big Foul, said the teamster at Port Jervis, as he helped us launch the canoes from a gravel bank. Where is the Big Foul Below Belvidere: youll strike it in a few days. No boat can run that rift at this stage of the water. Oh, its a rift, said Moseley, standing kneedeep in the river, and packing his canoe. I thought it was a bird. Why is it called the Big Fowl It is the foulest rapid on the Delaware, answered the teamster. I know the river to Trenton: went down last May on a fresh. You can run all the rest; but youll have to carry round the Big Foul Rift. We had before heard about this rapid with the ominous name. A discussion in Forest and Stream, a few years ago, directed the attention of canoemen to its alleged dangers and extreme rapidity of current. I had with me also the notes of one of the best canoemen in the country, who had run the Delaware in the spring of last year, to which I referred, and found these words : -- Great Foul Rift, short distance below Belvidere. Ran down on rafting fresh in May. Length almost a mile and a half from head of Little Foul to foot of Great Foul. Rapidity of water and danger much exaggerated. Thats all right for a...
